Hello,

I'm happy about you're review, but I don't think that the performance of the new preview has much to do with it as you do most of the work in Formats. Is it not faster to open a DNG than to open a JPEG in the same amount of time? In the developer mode everything is much faster as there are no previews and no extra steps that wait for the previews.
Regards,
Bennet P "The new image preview is more than a speed and convenience upgrade to previous versions of Lightroom, and makes the client-side editing process even more feature-rich and intuitive."
I actually agree with and appreciate this statement, but why does Adobe try to (and succeed in) make false improvements in the feature set that are NOT the much-talked-about speed and convenience upgrades.? That these statements are found in the review is a real surprise when the review was written by the same person who was in charge of improving the development environment in Lightroom 4 as well, and who had to keep on developing it to keep up with the changes to their implementation of Lightroom, smart previews, and performance improvements. Like many Lightroom users, I guess, I hoped for improvements in Lightroom's performance and features, but found Lightroom 5 to be overly complicated/demanding, not faster, no real improvements in an already fast tool, "paid" ads in the UI, and many inaccurate statements in the review that contravene the statements made by the reviewer. "Lightroom 5 is the best version of Lightroom I have used to date."
Here is your review....and here is your conclusion: "1) A well-rounded user experience. You designed a program. I think you did it well. Lightroom 5 is the best version of Lightroom I have used to date. You have refined and polished many things that made Lightroom 4 a more user-friendly program and made the user experience in Photoshop a joy to navigate."

A well-rounded user experience: I have no doubt that you and many other Adobe people
"""proudly"""" made Lightroom 5 to be as well-rounded a user experience as you could make it. That's the biggest lie in this review.
Refined and polished many things that made Lightroom 4 a more user-friendly program: I find it interesting that you posted such a glowing statement when you have to admit that the fonts are no longer user selectable. The old menus were much more user friendly."
Lightroom 5 is the best version of Lightroom I have used to date: you find out that Lightroom 5 isn't """the best version of Lightroom I have used to date" because you haven't used the latest version of it. You do have to admit that Lightroom 5 is not as well-rounded as your own version that is similar to what you had used previously. As I said, Lightroom 4 was much more user-friendly a few years ago. You are simply comparing Adobe Software with current technology to previous versions.
