It doesn't know how long it'll last. McDonald's(MCD) is facing serious competition from a new generation of fast-food chains that are using consumer apps and delivery services to take on rivals. Unlike M, which owns its stores, or YUM Brands (YUM), which owns Taco Bell and KFC, both Max and Shake Shack can pick and choose where they open new outlets. They also don't have to spend a lot of money on real estate. "There's a growing gap in the market," said Hans-Peter Kohli, a food analyst at food-research firm Mintel. McDonald's is also late to the game — everyone else has already adopted tech. "We are definitely behind," Kohli said. "We started in the 1920s and over a hundred years later and still doing this — we find this amazing." In a bid to ensure its survival, McDonald's is slowly but surely adapting. It's pushed its focus on coffee, a new product category that started with the launch of McCafé a few years ago.
