Mac OS/Image Conversion is no longer part of this release of Photoshop, meaning that users must use an external conversion utility. The 64-bit update also introduces a number of new features for Windows and macOS users, including changes to the macOS file formats and the addition of new file formats for Mac-only file extensions such as .psml, .aptx, and .apple. For Mac users, this particular release brings some significant changes to how Photoshop creates export files—views and Master (CMYK) colors are now exported individually, instead of as a combined PDF/HTML page. The differences for Windows users are minimal, but there are some subtle points. For example, save for Web Formats (SIF, EPS) and PDF files have been added as import/export targets. This means that users can save a file directly to these formats. Saves to PSD, PDF, TIFF and Web Formats (SIF, EPS) files can now use the "Save for Web" function, which optimizes photographs and graphics for the web.
